Network Space claims hat-trick of top awards

NETWORK Space has won a hat-trick of deals bringing new businesses and entrepreneurs to its brand new, award-winning, Century Park networkcentre in Rotherham.

The company, a joint venture between developers Langtree Group and national regeneration agency English Partnerships, has signed up Technical Print, Wren Turbines and Connection Recruitment.

Technical Print is a product marking specialist, working in the medical, automotive, cosmetic and promotions sectors, which has grown from employing two people to 10 and seen its turnover increase by more than 150 per cent in the four years since it began trading.

Director Craig Raistrick said: "Rotherham has always been a desired location for us and it was important to remain committed to the area.

"The level of financial support and initiatives on offer to young businesses is second to none and has without a doubt been central to the success of the company. The facilities on offer at Century Park networkcentre tick every box particularly when it comes to security. Knowing that the site has an award accolade endorsing its security measures is a real comfort and a benefit that far outweighs other developments in the area."

Wren Turbines was founded in 1999 and specialises in designing and manufacturing miniature jet engines. The company makes all the tooling for the turbine castings in-house and has miniature jets' turbine wheels cast in specialist foundries to full aerospace certification.

Like Technical Printing, Wren was based at a neighbouring business park next door and had outgrown its previous workspace, as has Connection Recruitment, a family run recruitment agency, whose clients include Rotherham and Barnsley Councils.

Network Space director Simon Peters said: "Century Park networkcentre has truly filled a gap in the market place. Securing three swift lettings just a month after completing the site is testament to the fact that we are offering precisely what small and medium size enterprises in the area, and beyond, so desperately need.

"Our aim is to bring new jobs and enterprise opportunities to the former coalfield areas and our networkcentres have been designed to help companies such as these by providing high quality, affordable premises with flexible lease terms."

Quest Property, the Barnsley developer behind the £70 million Gateway Plaza regeneration scheme in the town has launched a joint venture partnership with Leeds developer, Landmark Development Projects.

Jason Brook, Quest's chief executive, said: "We're delighted to be welcoming Landmark onto the flagship Gateway Plaza scheme. Over recent months Quest has been approached by numerous parties keen to form a partnership with the scheme and, after discussions with Landmark, we felt they were the ideal joint venture partnership."

Lord Hattersley at HLW

LORD HATTERSLEY, the Sheffield-born former deputy leader of the Labour Party, turned author, journalist and public speaker, is to open city law firm HLW's new £6 million headquarters at Commercial House, Commercial Street.

The former Barclays Bank site, which still retains the bank's original safe and vaults, has become home to 90 members of staff from HLW's former Sheffield offices in Queen Street and Vicar Lane.

HLW senior partner Andrew Hartley said: "We are delighted that Lord Hattersley has agreed to help us celebrate what has been a huge step forward for the firm. With his deep rooted connection with the region making him a true local success story, who better to mark the launch of HLW's successful future."
